FORMATIVE ASSESSMENT SUMMARY

Kate Jones – William & Leahy's Five Formative Assessment Strategies in Action

Assessments are procedures for drawing inferences. Formative assessments are procedures for drawing inferences about students' learning that are used to modify teaching and learning activities. There is no such thing as a formative assessment or a summative assessment. There are, instead, formative and summative uses of assessment information. We give students tasks we expect evidence, from which we draw conclusions. 'encompassing all those activities undertaken by teachers, which provide information to modify teaching and learning activities to meet the needs of the individual learner' (William and Black, 1991)

Formative assessment strategies

- Success Criteria and Learning Intention
Students are provided with a clear understanding of the end goal and the steps (success criteria) they need to take in order to achieve it.
- Elicit evidence of learning
To teach well we need to find out what students already know, and students to make informed decisions about next steps in their learning.
- Feedback to Feed forward
When we find out what students know or don't know we need to get them back on track. Any feedback the student does not need is a waste of time.
- Peer learning & assessment
Done effectively- can increase student achievement for those who receive it, and those who provide it.
- Independent learning
'When students are owners of their own learning all other strategies are secondary' (William and Leahy 2015).
